DUTIES OF ATTACHES ARE VERY DELICATE

Their Governments Expect to Be Kept Posted on All Army and Navy News.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

OF all the offices connected with embassies and legations, there are none more delicate than those of military and naval attaches. They are entrusted by their respective governments with the task of keeping them thoroughly posted with information on everything relating to the armies and navies of the countries in which they are stationed. Now the most important information of this nature is precisely that which the government concerned wishes at all costs to keep from becoming known to any foreign power. Indeed, the value of any invention, device or plan that may have been adopted in, to a great extent, destroyed if revealed to any foreign power. It is therefore a matter of honor for the military and naval attaches to restrict their search for information to subjects on which the government to which they are accredited are willing to enlighten them.

Any effort to obtain information other than this, that is to say, information which the government in question desires to keep secret, is regarded as an abuse of hospitality, or else the foreign diplomatic missions, and all of its members, including the naval and military attaches, are, strictly speaking, the guests of the government and, with no prospect of reciprocity, or the information unsatisfactory by any other means. When caught, or even when suspected of resorting to these practices, the attaches find it prudent to quit their post on a leave of absence, with no prospect of being re-employed.

As a general rule, these ethics are observed in the most loyal sense. But there are occasionally instances where a military or naval attaché's professional zeal, patriotism, and, perhaps too, his ambition for advancement, lead him to sacrifice thereto his honor, and to resort to the employment of espionage and other means to obtain information unsatisfactory by any other means. When caught, or even when suspected of resorting to these practices, the attaches find it prudent to quit their post on a leave of absence, with no prospect of being re-employed.

There has just been a case of this kind at Vienna, where Colonel Michael Zedemyl Jandoric, the military attaché of the Russian embassy, has suddenly left Vienna for good and all, without any of the customary leave-taking, and without being received in the usual farewell audience by the Emperor. He was, however, in receipt of a letter from the Emperor, in which the Emperor stated that the last authentic Duc Tascher de la Pagerie died in 1901 (as will be found on reference to the Almanac de Gotha of the present year), in a sanatorium near Munich. He left no children by his marriage to his Greek wife, who was a married while secretary of legation at Athens, and who was born at Angelica Panos, at Lania, in Greece, and whose first marriage to her countryman, John Paranothos, was dissolved by a divorce. A woman near seventy years of age, she still survives, making her home at Athens, and is the only person who has any legal right to style herself Duchess Tascher de la Pagerie.

Among my letters I find an inquiry from a reader as to the identity of the Duc Tascher de la Pagerie, who was married a fortnight or so ago in Paris to Mile. Luc Arbel. In reply I have stated that the last authentic Duc Tascher de la Pagerie died in 1901 (as will be found on reference to the Almanac de Gotha of the present year), in a sanatorium near Munich. He left no children by his marriage to his Greek wife, who was a married while secretary of legation at Athens, and who was born at Angelica Panos, at Lania, in Greece, and whose first marriage to her countryman, John Paranothos, was dissolved by a divorce. A woman near seventy years of age, she still survives, making her home at Athens, and is the only person who has any legal right to style herself Duchess Tascher de la Pagerie.

The people who now style themselves Duc and Duchess Tascher de la Pagerie in Paris, and who make their home at 66 Avenue du Bois de Boulogne in that city, have no earthly right to the title, and cannot use it for any legal document.

The Tascher de la Pagerie were a very old French family of the Orleans district, who were able to trace back their descent in an unbroken line from Henry I, Duke of Burgundy, to a territorial magnate at the beginning of the fourteenth century. In the seventeenth century one of its members, who had been a page of honor at Versailles, and who had afterwards served in France and Italy, settled at Martigny. His second daughter, Marie Joseph Rose, married, on promiscuous notes, the Count de Beauharnais, who lost his head on the guillotine in the revolution, and afterwards became the consort of Napoleon Bonaparte, as Empress Josephine.

The Empress had a young first cousin, Robert Tascher de la Pagerie, son of one of her father's younger brothers. Robert was granted the title of count by the Emperor Napoleon, and his military education at Fontainebleau, distinguished himself in the battle of Eylau, and under Junot in Portugal, and was a D. C. to his cousin, Prince Eugene, when the latter was viceroy of Italy. He was married at the Tuilleries to Princess Leyon, of Bavaria, a mediocrity of that name, and after the overthrow of the empire, settled down with his wife in Bavaria, remaining on particularly intimate terms with his cousin, Queen Hortense, and with her son, Louis Bonaparte.

parts, at Arenenberg. When she died it was he who obtained from King Louis Philippe the requisite permission to bring back her remains to her native land, and who followed them to their last resting place, at Rueil, near Paris.

On Louis becoming Emperor, as Napoleon III, he invited the old count to become the grand master of the Empire's household, and appointed him Chamberlain, as her first chamberlain. While the old Robert Tascher de la Pagerie died in 1861 as a count, his son Charles, the Empress's first chamberlain, who resided in the Tuilleries with his family, by virtue of his office, and who was married to Caroline Perle, received the authorization of Napoleon III, in 1859, to assume, as a French nobleman, the dual title of his mother's kinsman, the last Duke of Dalberg. He did not become Duke of Dalberg, but the first Duke Tascher de la Pagerie. He had one son and two daughters. The son, Robert, born in 1849, and, therefore, a boy of thirteen when his father took up his residence at the Tuilleries, was first chamberlain of the Empress, was the second and last duke, for, having no children, the title, which came to him through his mother, Princess Louise, passed to his brother, Prince Duke of Dalberg, who, in 1871, married two sisters, one of whom died unmarried, while the other became the wife of Prince Maximilian Thurn and Taxis, by whom she left several children. He survived her brother, dying in Bavaria, at her chateau of Nollendorf, on the Danube, in 1905. The first duke had two sisters, one whom, Countess Stephanie Tascher de la Pagerie, lived with her brother and her mother, the old Princess Louise, at the Tuilleries, and dying an old maid at an advanced age, left some very interesting volumes of reminiscences. She suffered greatly from financial reverses after the overthrow of the empire, and was dependent on an annuity which she received from King Charles of Prussia, Oskar of Sweden, to whom she was closely related, their mother having been a member of the Beaulieu family. She had a sister named Sophie, who married Count von Hatzfeldt, and a brother, Prince von Hatzfeldt, and her son, a former member of the French diplomatic service, and an officer on the retired list of the French army, divides his time between his home in Paris and his chateau in the department of the Alier.

Charles Louis Tascher de la Pagerie, who now styles himself duke, has no connection whatever with the medical house of Leyon, or with the former Duke of Dalberg. Indeed, it is necessary for him to go back considerably prior to the French revolution of 1789, in order to discover the connection of his branch of the "Tascher" family with that of the Duke of Dalberg, which he has longed. Consequently, he has not even any right to the title of count, bestowed upon Robert Tascher de la Pagerie, on the occasion of his marriage with Princess Leyon, by the first Napoleon.

CHURCH AT PLASKI IS CONSECRATED

Bishop Randolph and Several Ministers Take Part in Impressive Services.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

Plaski, Va., May 14.—Bishop Randolph, of the Diocese of Virginia, formally consecrated Christ Episcopal Church here this morning at 11 o'clock, the service in setting apart this handsome house of worship being especially impressive, confirmation service following the consecration. The ceremony was delivered by Rev. J. B. Dunn, pastor of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Lynchburg, who delivered an able discourse on the subject, "The Church as a Utopian Dream." A number of nearby rectors also attended the service. Rev. C. A. Marshall, formerly of Shepherdstown, W. Va., is the present rector, Christ Church corner-stone was laid in 1903, but the service of consecration had been deferred, having once been postponed after the date had been fixed on account of the illness of Bishop Randolph, he being unable to reach here. The church, while not large, is one of the most attractive edifices in the city, being built of gray brick and modern in architectural design. Some years ago the congregation, which numbered about 100, burned the old church after the completion, very few services being held therein. Until the completion of the present church after the burning of the old church, the congregation was used by the congregation. Judge Thornton L. Maasie, who was killed in the courthouse tragedy at Hillsville, was a prominent member of Christ Church and one of the vestrymen, and contributed liberally to its support.

The supervisors of Carroll County decided to make an appropriation to pay the transportation expenses of the Confederate soldiers of the county to the Gettysburg reunion when they met on Monday at Hillsville.

Professor Rudolph, who has been principal of the High School at Galax, has been elected principal of the High School at Galax for the coming term, and it is reported will accept.

WIDOW SEEKING
MAN SHE'S WED

The Search Kept Up in Obedience to Husband's Deathbed Request.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

New York, May 14.—Mrs. Martha Williams, a pretty nineteen-year-old widow, called on the steamer Patricia today in continuation of her search for the man she is to marry, according to a deathbed request made by her late husband, Eugene Williams, of Pittsburgh.

Three years ago, when Mrs. Williams was a girl, she met Eugene Williams in Pittsburgh, a restaurant during luncheon, and while dining together that evening promised to marry him. They were married eight months later.

Seven months after being married Williams became seriously ill, and when he realized that he was dying, begged his young wife never to marry again, but later modified this by permitting her to marry a life-long friend living in Europe, whom he described, but did not name.

"My husband told me," said Mrs. Williams to-day, "that this man was my true affinity, and that sooner or later we would be brought together by some power neither of us could control."

"Three times I have sailed to foreign lands, hunting for my affinity, and at least twenty times I thought I had found him. After becoming engaged, however,"—at this point Mrs. Williams was interrupted by a group of reporters, who asked her to stop, as they had no more than a dozen minutes' time, before the reporters "I discovered my mistake. Finally, in despair, I went to spiritualists. They found my affinity for me and everything has been arranged. We are going to meet and I will return with him as my husband."

Mrs. Williams promised to let the reporters know the result of her search.

UNIVERSAL PEACE IS UTOPIAN DREAM

Dr. Lyman Abbott Has No Visions of War Flags Being Furlled.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

Lake Mohonk, N. Y., May 14.—"Universal disarmament and peace are a Utopian dream" asserted Dr. Lyman Abbott, editor of the Outlook magazine, to-day in his opening address as chairman of the Lake Mohonk conference on international arbitration. It was for an expression similar to this that Dr. Abbott was dropped as a fellow of the American Peace Society recently, and his statement to-day was taken as a reply to his critics.

In opening his address Dr. Abbott said: "The blow of the fist, the gleam of the sword and the bark of the cannon will continue until some other power greater than that of armed men is found to protect innocence from injustice."

The speaker criticized the United States for annulling the treaty with Russia.

"Christians have not stood and ought not to stand for peace at any price. They have recognized that there are worse things than war, but as war is worse than peace, they have not stood for peace at any price."

"Before the scheme for obtaining justice by arbitration can be carried out, three things must be developed, viz: There must be developed in civilized nations a sense of justice strong enough to overcome race, religious and national prejudices;

"A permanent tribunal which has power to give official and authoritative expression must be developed; and every nation must develop a sense of honor which will insure the acceptance without resistance or serious complaint of the decision on each question submitted to the tribunal."
